

Scaly face

Budgie infected with the with face mite

Scaly face infections - no longer a problem. Scaly face infections have been around as long as we have been breeding budgies. There are more cures around than there are infections - none of which have been terribly successful. VetaClub members now have exclusive access to the best new treatment available - Scatt.

Canary and pigeon breeders also benefit from this exciting new product. Cnemidoptes pili is the name of the little mite which burrows in the skin of the bird to cause the condition we call Scaly Face. This little mite is very hardy, he can live off the bird for long periods and his burrowing and egg laying ability is impressive. Killing the mite is relatively easy, eradicating the disease from an aviary is very difficult.
